Course Description

How are we to analyze the words that Christians use? How might oral forms compare with written ones? And how should we try to understand the relationships between religious language and ritual action without seeing one as merely derived from the other? This course provides the opportunity both to explore theories of language use and to apply them to forms of verbal discourse ranging from prayers, sermons, speaking in tongues, and citing biblical verses to more informal narratives. Protestant and Catholic attitudes to religious language are examined in ways that sometimes reinforce, something challenge, theological distinctions between the two, and there will be the opportunity for students to bring their own texts (possibly derived from their own proposed areas of research) for analysis. Various techniques for the analysis of ritual texts are explored and evaluated, and the advantages and disadvantages of close textual analysis are discussed. While I will be presenting techniques of 'reading' texts derived mostly from social scientific literatures, you are welcome to incorporate other methods as appropriate.

Texts

I shall be making relevant texts available on Blackboard (marked 'B') as well as using journal articles that should be accessible electronically (marked 'E'). While this course outline provides a guide to some of the main texts I obviously do not object to you drawing on good research that is not mentioned here - in fact I encourage it.

Attendance and Participation

Regular attendance and active participation in this course are essential to your success and to your ability to support others on the course. Please notify me in advance if for an unavoidable reason you have to miss a session. A good tip is to come to each class thinking of at least one idea that you found interesting in the readings, as well as one point or argument that you disagreed with.

Class Presentation

In the second half of the course, you will be asked to provide a text or texts for the class to analyze for one or more of the classes (depending on number of students enrolled). You will lead the discussion of the text, having provided me with a copy of it to put on Blackboard by the Monday before the class. For a given class, you can ask people to read one or two texts, substantial enough to sustain discussion (led by you) for around half an hour.

Critical Review Essay

You will be required to write a critical review essay of one approach to analyzing the interaction between words and worship, taken from the first five weeks of the course. Your essay should be 5 pages in length (including notes but excluding bibliography; Times New Roman, Font 12pt; Spacing 1.5). Consult with me as you plan the essay.

These assignments should be handed to me directly at the beginning of the fifth class.

Term Paper

You will be required to write a 12-page term paper (including notes but excluding bibliography) on a topic chosen in consultation with me. The paper should involve the application of methods/theories of textual analysis to one or at most two texts. You may juxtapose one or more methods/theories in order to assess their utility and applicability to the texts you choose. You should hand in copies of the texts along with the essay.

I suggest using the University of Chicago style for footnotes and the bibliography (author-date method). A very useful quick guide is at <http://www.chicagomanualofstyle.org/home.html> However, if you wish to use another method that is fine as long as you use it consistently, and provide all the relevant information.

These assignments should be handed to me directly at the beginning of the final class.

Submissions

I much prefer your assignments to be typed (but according to U of T regulations handwritten work that is neat and legible is accepted for evaluation in the normal fashion). You should retain copies of your assignments at least until you receive them back.

Summary of Submission Dates:

February 7 - Critical Review Essay

April 4 - Term Paper

Religious Holidays and Observances

According to U of T regulations: "It is important that no University member be seriously disadvantaged because of her or his religious observation. Students have an obligation to alert members of the teaching staff in a timely fashion to upcoming religious observances and anticipated absences. Every effort will be made avoid scheduling tests, examinations or other compulsory activity at these times."

Missed and Late Assignments

You need to obtain proper documentation of your illness and you must contact me as soon as possible. Do not wait until the assignment's due date has passed!

- All late assignments will be penalized 2% as soon as they are late, and then 2% extra per 24-hour period up to a maximum of five days (including weekends). After five days, late assignments will no longer be accepted unless there is clear evidence of a good reason for the delay. You must email me a copy of your late assignment as soon as it is completed, to demonstrate the time of submission; you need also to ensure that I receive a hard copy.

- Extensions will only be granted if you provide proper documentation. If you fall ill, please print out a copy of the “student medical certificate” and have it signed by your physician (<http://www.artsci.utoronto.ca/current/undergraduate/forms>).
- Please bring proper forms of documentation to the next class. Even though you have been in email contact with me, proper documentation is required.
- Jobs or other commitments that require your frequent absence, late arrival or early departure from class will significantly affect your attendance and participation grade.
- With this syllabus, all work has been assigned and made public in advance. It is your responsibility to plan ahead so that you can successfully complete and submit all assigned work on its announced due date. It is possible that you will have multiple assignments due for your various courses on the same day or week. Plan ahead, as this is not grounds for granting an extension. Only in the case of long-term illness lasting more than one week and which is properly documented, will an extension be considered.
- Save, save, save. Email assignments to yourself. I will not grant extensions for computer and/or printer malfunctions.

Academic Integrity

Plagiarism is a very serious, punishable offence that can result in a failing grade for this course. All use of words or ideas from the published works of another individual or individuals must be properly acknowledged. Failure to do so constitutes plagiarism. Please note that changing a few words in text(s) from other writers does not make it your own. If you paraphrase, please give the name of the authors, dates of publication and page numbers. In general, you should use direct quotations and paraphrases sparingly. If there is uncertainty regarding what constitutes plagiarism, or what are acceptable forms of citation and referencing, students should consult the instructor. Please see the following website for more information: <http://www.utoronto.ca/writing/plagsep.html>.

Accessibility

Students with diverse learning styles and needs are welcome in this course. In particular, if you have a disability/health consideration that may require accommodations, please feel free to approach me as soon as possible.
