Tracing its history to the origins of Christianity, the Roman Catholic Church is the world's largest religious institution and quite likely its most diverse. Although it is highly centralized and hierarchical, it has adapted to countless different cultural milieus around the world. For this reason it is an excellent example of the relation between processes of globalization and the localization of meaning, practice, ritual, and experience. This course will focus on reading ethnography about Catholicism around the world, identifying and discussing cultural differences and similarities. Grading will be based five writing assignments, each comparing two books based on 1) what they say about Catholicism, 2) what they say about the local culture, and 3) what they say about the anthropologist's approach. Undergraduates will read selected chapters from the assigned books; graduate students will read the entire book.
